

A black and white photograph showing the archaeological ruins of the Temple of Mars Ultor in the Forum of Augustus, Rome. In the foreground, the stone foundations and lower walls of the temple are visible, showing the arrangement of the columns. In the background, the Arch of Septimius Severus stands prominently, with a line of trees behind it. The sky is clear and bright.

A black and white photograph showing a perspective view down a long, straight, paved road in an ancient Roman city. The road is flanked on both sides by tall, rectangular stone pillars or walls, which appear to be part of a colonnade or a defensive wall. The road surface is made of large, flat stones. In the distance, a line of trees and a hill are visible under a cloudy sky. The overall scene conveys a sense of grandeur and historical significance.

A black and white photograph of the ruins of the Basilica of St. John in Ephesus. The image shows the remaining walls and arches of the large church structure, which is built with alternating layers of light and dark stone. The ruins are set against a backdrop of trees and a clear sky. The foreground is a flat, open area, likely a courtyard or a path. The overall scene is one of historical significance and architectural grandeur.
